ALLEN DULLES SAYS U.S.
CANNOT PANIC AT RED INSULT

CHICAGO, Dec. 1 (UP)—Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, says the United States has to use restraint in dealing with the insults of Russia and Red China.

Dulles spoke last night before the University of Chicago Law School Alumni Association. He said the United States has to remain cool in critical times and avoid the kind of "thoughtless impatience or panic that could lead to a general atomic war."

Eventually, there is solid ground for hope "that the free world will become so militarily strong, so politically stable, so economically prosperous," that the Soviets would dare not attack and could not subvert, Dulles said.

As a result, he said, "peaceful coexistence" will become an actual condition to enjoy, rather than a slogan of which to be wary.
